>> AVERY WALKER: Hi. My name is Avery Walker. I'm twenty-three years old. I'm a full-time student at UNLV and I am here to share a little bit of my story and relationship with the West Las Vegas Library Theater and the Las Vegas Clark County Library District.

As far as I can remember, the library has always been a part of my growing up and my education. I actually had my kindergarten graduation ceremony here in the library theater. I was five years old then so my relationship began very early with activities involving community outreach and also academia.

I spent countless hours in the library, especially during middle school and the beginnings of high school. I would have to complete many projects during the week that required me to have access to a computer which I didn't always have. Also books for research because I was always interested in the arts from the time I was in middle school and so the library played a major role in personal research that I wanted to do for the arts and dance.

My relationship with the library has given me kind of an upper hand in regards to the work field that I study because I am a dance major at UNLV.

My artistic training began when I was thirteen. I was a percussionist with the West Las Vegas Arts Center Performance Ensemble which I am now the coordinator for.

I began dancing when I was sixteen. I just finished my last dance concert with UNLV so just moving on the route to graduating and receiving my BFA.

All young people definitely need to invest in getting a library card because it opens you up to the entire world. It kept me out of the streets and out of what most young people my age were doing. It gave me a vehicle to be able to pursue more than what I could see right in front of me.

Without the library services and programs that the library offered, I probably would have been in a completely different field and had not found my real passion which is for the arts.

So I would just like to say thank you.
